

Abortion on Demand

Abortion in the UK was regulated by common law until the Offences Against the Person Act 1861 made it an offence, punishable by life imprisonment, for the pregnant woman and any practitioner who assisted in the process. The Act applied throughout the UK except Scotland where they had their own abortion laws.

It was considered to be the cause of too many back-street abortions, so the Abortion Act 1967 was introduced, applicable to the whole of the UK including Scotland but not Northern Ireland.

Abortion continues to be an offence, but the Act makes an exception so that it can be permitted in certain circumstances with the agreement of two medical practitioners and within a specified time limit (currently 24 weeks after conception). One of the permissible circumstances is the risk to the physical or mental health of the mother, so it is only necessary for a woman to go to her GP and say "I just can't cope" and she can have an abortion.

This has created a large-scale abortion industry, with doctors filling in forms where they only have to tick a "mental health" box, and consequently there have been more than 8.4 million abortions since the Abortion Act 1967 was introduced.

In Northern Ireland, abortion is a devolved issue, permitted under much more restricted conditions, and women have been travelling to other parts of the UK for abortions. In the Republic of Ireland it was constitutionally illegal until an amendment was approved by a referendum, held on 25 May 2018. This will put Northern Ireland under pressure to liberalise their abortion laws, a matter that has always been resisted by Democratic Unionists.

The latest threat to the unborn child is a proposal to amend the Offences Against the Person Act 1861 so that abortion is decriminalised. It will be permitted in any circumstances, at any time until birth, without the need for medical supervision or approval. Abortion methods have changed, it used to be surgical, but now it can be done just by taking some pills, so it will only be necessary for a woman to go to a pharmacy, or get some pills over the internet, and she can abort her child and make it look like a miscarriage. Nobody will know, not even her husband or partner.

This proposed amendment has already been debated in Parliament on 5 June 2018, led by Stella Creasy. Please write to your MP and say that you oppose it.

Support 4 the Family in UKIP

It's an honour to be appointed UKIP's first-ever Families and Children spokesperson.

The two-parent family is the bedrock of a healthy society and the best place to nurture the next generation, and I intend to be its champion. I also recognise that in a democratic society (and in a political party like UKIP) people are and must be free to choose, prefer and promote other forms of personal domestic arrangement. UKIP is a small-government party and I aim to get the interfering state off the backs of families. My driving long-term aim will be Less State: More Family.

Transgender is Totalitarian

A new government initiative to update the law on gender recognition is threatening to force all of us to accept the fantasy that biological sex is irrelevant to personal identity. Tragically this perverse idea, prefigured in the Equalities Act of 2010 seriously endangers not just the health of our children but of our very democracy. By legally excluding objectors as 'haters' and 'bigots', the law is being used to force acceptance of the irrational claim that a person's biological sex matters less than their perceived 'gender'. This completely undermines our God given reason and our freedoms of speech, conscience and religion.

It is also a direct attack on matrimony. In the fight for a hypocritical 'equality' transgender totalitarians want the false 'freedom' to be masculine one moment and feminine the next. This includes eradicating fundamental terms like 'mother' and 'father' which would empower them but enslave the rest of us.

The state would be controlling our lives once it has pounded our natural sexual identities into something 'fluid' but legally recognised by the government.

To help forge these legal manacles the government is conducting a consultation until October 19th this year to prepare for a new law that would allow the 'transgendered' to obtain a Gender Recognition Certificate (GRC) more easily. By simply submitting a written application without medical reports or evidence of living as the chosen sex for two years a biological male with a GRC as a woman would have the power to be treated as a woman.

The 'transgendered' and their allies would rule us. Even now the NHS is being warned of possible legal action if it doesn't allow men who want to 'become' women to freeze their sperm for future 'parent' hood and pro rata for women before changing sex. Already we have male sex offenders claiming to be transgendered females being sent to women's prisons and committing further offences there then being sent to a man's prison. And women civil servants in the Home Office are refusing to use gender-neutral lavatories because men using the facilities aren't closing cubicle doors.

Perversely Facebook already allows different 'genders' to be chosen from a list of 71 that includes asexual, female to male transgender man, female to male transsexual man, F2M, gender neutral, hermaphrodite, intersex man, intersex person etc.

Roman Sculpture of Janus

The god of beginnings, gates, transitions, time, duality, passages and endings

For an ideology that declares biological sex as irrelevant to 'gender identity' it seems to be obsessively preoccupied with its physical manifestations.

The evil 'transgendered' mind behind this damned nonsense is the academically celebrated lesbian Judith Butler. Absurdly claiming that men have imposed their beliefs in sexual differences on us so they can rule women, she is following in the footsteps of sexual pervert Alfred Kinsey. He falsely claimed that his 'research' proved that Judeo-Christian ethics misunderstood sex and constructed a revolutionary ideology to put him beyond criticism. He persuaded politicians to soften the penalties for sexual crimes claiming his research proved the harm wasn't great!

The 'New Normal' conference was held in London in November 2016, organised by Christian Concern to try and make sense of transgender ideology.

But his main message promoted marriage free consensual sex. And the predictable fruits of his work soon showed themselves, more diseases, earlier death and social disruption. Before Kinsey there were two sexually transmitted diseases, today some authorities put the figure at over eighty.

His so called 'research' was proved to be a pack of self serving lies in 1990 by Judith Riesman, the same year Judith Butler published her Gender Trouble: Feminism and the Subversion of Identity. Now her Gender Theory 'that a person's identity follows from their fluid and diverse sexual orientation' is going mainstream and is about to be inflicted on our children through changes in the curriculum.

The same thing has already been attempted in France but parents keeping their children en masse from school until the gender-mainstreaming curriculum was withdrawn stopped it. And we need to stop it here in the UK to preserve our freedom from state totalitarianism.
