

Support 4 the Family in UKIP

Children belong to the family not the state

6 Nov. 2018

Rough Justice in the Gulag Britannica

We are concerned about two cases of arbitrary justice inflicted on people for real or imaginary offences, who have been campaigning against predatory sexual behaviour.

Tommy Robinson

Tommy is one of the most hard working and effective campaigners for the victims of rape grooming gangs which tend to proliferate in communities where the abduction and sexual exploitation of young teenage girls is considered morally and socially acceptable (because of the influence of Islam).

Tommy got himself into trouble at Canterbury Crown Court in May 2017 for his journalistic activities and could have been sent to prison but was given a suspended sentence because he would not be safe in any prison where there are Muslim inmates. The suspension was subject to the condition that he should not do anything that might interfere with the proceedings at any court in the UK.

On Friday 25 May 2018 he was arrested outside Leeds Crown Court for activities entirely outside the building, typical of journalism that occurs when defendants are arriving and leaving. They lied to his solicitor and said he had been released, but then they put him on trial immediately on vague charges, without his solicitor, and sentenced him to 13 months in prison including 3 months for his suspended sentence. They sent him to Hull prison, all done and dusted within five hours of his arrest. Shortly afterwards he was transferred to Onley prison which has a high proportion of radical Muslim inmates and he was put in solitary confinement because of concerns about his safety.

He was released on appeal on 1 August 2018 but was back in court at the Old Bailey for a re-trial on 27 September. He asked permission to present an argument that other journalists had engaged in the same activities but nothing had happened to them, and his trial was politically motivated. The trial was adjourned until 23 October when he presented his case and it was referred to the Attorney General. Then on 5 November he was "released from bail" which means the case has become dormant.

What will happen next? See the following pages:

www.tommyrobinson.online

www.facebook.com/thetommyrobinson/

Melanie Shaw

Melanie is a victim of childhood sexual abuse and a whistleblower who grassed up the paedophiles at Beechwood Children's Home in Nottingham. In 2011 she gave evidence to police that led to Operation Daybreak, an investigation into more than 100 child abuse victims at Beechwood and other children's homes.

But life is not simple for a whistleblower. She apparently embarked on a life of crime. In 2014 she was convicted of arson for setting fire to a shed and was sentenced to three years probation. On 17 February 2016 in Nottingham Crown Court she was issued with restraining orders for harassment of certain people. Then on 11 January 2017 she was at the same court again for breach of the orders and sentenced to two years in prison, but not much is known about the hearing. No observers were present, it was not announced in advance, but the event exists in the court records. She was not present but was connected by video link to the prison where she was on remand, but it broke down as soon as she tried to speak.

Her release date was 2 June 2018 but she remained in prison on remand, charged with setting fire to her cell bedding (possibly a protest or an attempted suicide). Three charges of arson were heard at Leeds Crown Court on 16 October 2018 but she was absent because of her poor state of mental health (probably a consequence of 18 months solitary confinement during her 2 year sentence). It appears to have been a 'trial of the facts' where a jury decided that she committed the offences but no verdict was recorded because a defendant cannot be found 'guilty' in circumstances where they cannot defend themselves.

This is an ongoing story, see the following pages:

www.ukcolumn.org

www.facebook.com/groups/365665550469458/

British Justice

These are just two examples of the British justice system going wrong and there could be more. This is what happens in supposedly tolerant democratic Britain when people speak out against sexual predators and paedophiles.

Mike Gascoigne

Support 4 the Family is a UKIP special interest group campaigning for traditional family values. If you would like to get involved, see our website: support4thefamily.org